

Caroline Duchaine
Laval Hospital Research Center

Caroline Duchaine graduated from Laval University, in Quebec City with her PhD in 1996. Caroline completed 2 years of post doc at Montreal University in aerobiology and 2 years at the University of Iowa at the Institute for Rural and Environmental Health. Since the year 2000 Caroline has been an adjunct professor in the department of biochemistry and microbiology at Laval University. Caroline is currently a researcher at Laval Hospital Research Center where she is running a bioaerosol and respiratory health research program. She is also working on several grants and projects including Defense Research and Development Canada, industries, Occupational Health agencies, and Federal and provincial agencies. Caroline has been involved in MRF research since 1998 namely in M. immunogenum detection and biodiversity studies.